One of Heber's early merchants.

Joseph A. Rasband became store manager. The Consolidated Wagon and Machine Company occupied space in the south end of the new building. On the upper story there were a variety of tenants. The Wasatch High School met there for several years, there were offices of professional men and the county public welfare office and the library occupied space at various times.

In 1936 an explosion in the building's furnace caused a fire that spread rapidly through the building, destroying completely the store and the library and the U.S. Forest Service office and Welfare office on the second floor. After the fire the company was reorganized and a smaller building was reconstructed. Charles DeGraff became manager of the store, which was later sold to Engman Bond. At the present time most of the building is leased by Saleway and the remaining part houses Christensen's Dry Goods Store.

In 1916, A. Hatch and Company became known as the Heber City Exchange. Managers of the store after Joseph Hatch included Ludwig Anderson, William L. Turner, John A. Anderson, Ray Mahoney and Norma Remund, Daniels, was recently honored by the Department of Social Services for her dedication and commitment to serving people in the Wasatch County area. Ms. Remund, an office technician with the Department for one and one-half years, was nominated for a department level incentive award by her colleagues in the Heber City Social Services office. In nominating her, they said, "Ms. Remund is always very concerned about helping people who come into the office and will stay late and, if necessary, make sure that work is completed to help provide services to those in need. She is very caring and concerned for people."

The award carries a bonus of $200 and was approved by several committees. Ms. Remund's nomination was submitted by local staff to the District Social Services Incentive Committee in Provo which selected her for a departmental level award from many nominees. The nomination was then sent to the State Department of Social Services where the review committee gave its approval for the award.

Ms. Remund was honored at a reception in Provo when she was presented the award.
